“Our intellectual property was insufficiently protected and we wanted to expand overseas,” said the CEO of a middle-market high-tech firm. His corporate counsel, a ProVisors™ member, referred an IP attorney with a PhD in computer science, a national accounting firm, an export consultant, and a lawyer specializing in customs regulations. This ProVisors™ team “created a system for protecting our IP and laid the basis for a smooth international expansion,” said the CEO.

“I sold my business at a life-changing price and was well prepared to invest the proceeds,” said the owner of a large manufacturing company with a global supply chain and global markets and production facilities. The optimum outcome resulted from the collaboration of nine ProVisors™ members: his accountant; an investment banker; attorneys who specialized in transactions, ERISA law, and international tax law; an HR consultant; a real estate appraiser; an IT expert, and a wealth manager.

“Our firm has flourished despite the downturn in home construction,” said the owners of an electrical contracting firm. Insurance and accounting professionals, members of ProVisors™, enabled them to qualify for bonds required to win bids for major work on public schools. The accountant also increased efficiency by introducing specialized electrical-contracting software.
